DUTCH SHIP SINKS IN CRASH OFF HARBOR HERE; 29 RESCUED

Bow of Loaded Oil Barge Smashed

Coast Guard, City Fire Crews Rush to Aid; Men Take to Boats

All hands were saved, uninjured, Thursday night when a Dutch freighter sank in Lake Michigan four miles off the Breakwater light shortly after colliding with a barge being towed by an oil company tug. The 29 seamen were brought ashore by coastguardmen.

Complete details of the crash could not be learned immediately. An official inquiry into the disaster is scheduled for 10 a.m. Friday at the Federal Building, authorities said late Thursday.

The crash occurred at 7:15 p.m. as the Prins Willem V of the Grinnell Line was leaving Milwaukee and the Sinclair Yug Chicago was coming into the harbor towing a barge loaded with 7,000 gallons of fuel oil from East Chicago, Ill.

John Barenfett of Chicago, skipper of the tug, said the tug and barge were working toward the harbor entrance when the Prins Willem suddenly veered and struck the barge. The bow of the floating tank ripped the Willem shipsides, tearing a gaping hole in the freighter's side.

The Willem rolled over in the rough seas and sank less than an hour after the collision. The 29 crewmen on board, six of whom were in the engine room when the crash occurred, abandoned ship some time before it sank. They were all safely aboard the coast guard vessels when the 2,734 ton freighter sank in 80 feet of water.

The bow of the oil barge was stove in.

Whole Ship Trembled, Crash Survivor Says

"I had just gone to my quarters for bed when the ship started shaking. The whole ship trembled, I don't know what happened, but I ran on deck to find out."
Coast Guard Could Only Watch Ship Slide Under

A crew of 24 collided and sank the Coast Guard Tender Hollibrock, according to Coast Guard officials. The ship was located at the foot of Lake Michigan, about 12 miles west of the city. The Hollibrock had been spotted by a passing vessel at about 4:30 p.m. on March 1.

The Hollibrock, a 400-foot vessel, was reportedly carrying 7,000 gallons of oil, according to Coast Guard sources. The crew of the Hollibrock was said to have been rescued by another vessel in the area.

The Hollibrock was located in heavy fog and rough seas, according to Coast Guard sources. The vessel was found to be listing to port, and efforts were made to stabilize the ship. However, the ship eventually sank, leaving the crew stranded in the water.

The search for the missing crew continued throughout the night. Coast Guard helicopters and vessels searched the area, but no survivors were found. The investigation into the cause of the sinking is ongoing.

Phone a friend for help or ask a question about the sinking. The Coast Guard is working to determine the cause of the sinking.
